General Objectives

Recognising traditional oral popular literature as central discipline of social human sciences and intrinsic part of nonmaterial universal human heritage; means of affirming identity bringing peoples together (UNESCO), IELT proposes:

consider place occupied by popular culture(s) in relation to societies, cultures, contemporary literature; redefinition, within academic research paradigm and its integration into current daily practice;

analyse phenomena of intertextuality containing traditional elements as confirmed in individually authored work: rediscovery and return to tradition, roots and foundations;

evaluate conservative action within process involving creation of new, considering modern or contemporary text as palimpsest through its relationship with texts preceding it, and with extinguished texts on which it lives (rewritten, parodied, or quoted);

collect and analyse material from diverse literary genres (songs, tales, stories, anecdotes, legends, riddles and other texts), from various cultures and societies and research it with contributions from a variety of disciplines: Ethnology, Anthropology, Sociology, Biology, Environmental Science, Mathematics, so as to carry out inter and transdisciplinary studies which seek to provide wide-ranging understanding of literary, social and cultural world;

continue and in the future widen the scope of inter/multi and transdisciplinarity, through creation of multilevel sessions (with multiple valence) where academic paper is reconciled with artistic, ludic and popular/oral/traditional aspects;

carry out research projects within lusophone and other international areas – multicultural context extending beyond merely European one;

publish works in Portuguese language and European languages or bilingual versions;

ENCOURAGE:

international publishing of collections and artistic productions (cinema documentaries, exhibitions, shows, CDs, DVDs) connected with oral/popular/traditional culture and raise awareness regarding value and contemporary nature (often secret, invisible) of these cultural instantiations in contemporary society and art;

teaching of this vast and replete area of studies at primary, secondary and tertiary educational levels, giving emphasis to local and international promotion of knowledge;
reflection concerning teaching as well as activities to raise value of popular, often subversive, culture(s), namely when, through imposed and homogenised products of mass culture, they become used as sheet music or yeast for new creations;
active support, within critical perspective, to work which presents and gives value to popular/popularised/popularising and/or marginal/marginalised culture heritage, in rural and/or urban communities, both those conserving and innovating;
respect, through different channels, for the specificity of traditional literature, and seeing within it vast field of action, not only with regard to its collection and museification but above all through data analysis of the same;
INVEST in lifelong training activities for community and establish PhDs and post-doctoral studies in Portuguese and foreign universities so as to acquire a thorough knowledge of nonmaterial heritage and preserve it and produce various academic and cultural objects concerning it.

Objectives and Achievements

General Objectives

Examine traditional text in its main lines by telling specific from general aspects; study uses of orality in its traditional forms and analyse new developing forms, i.e. in urban and technological contexts and examine its relation with recent forms of social grouping i.e. 'desafios' (call-and-response dialogue songs), games, challenges and football (Group3).

Examining and questioning corpus of tradition by editing collections, anthologies, partial editions, etc. and promoting reading, story telling sessions as well as publicising songs - performances by specialized groups working in collaboration with IELT (Cramol – forthcoming edition in CD). Other editions: collections of considerably neglected genres: proverbs in lusophone countries, legends, praise songs and poems –and widening existing collections. Systematic studying of tales under the scope of text theory helped to supplement existing collections and launched critical reflection which is to be expanded in the forthcoming period of 2007-2010.

Examining genres of traditional literature in different genre systems. Some of the works published as stories on string in the collections “Bilhetes de Identidade”, “À mão de semear” and “Redes e enredos” provided a strong contribution to the understanding and revelation of specific narrative configurations - predominant themes, motives, episodes and characters – focusing mainly on the tale, the fable and the proverbs. They also opened the way to further and deeper evaluation of how tradition texts relate to literary canon (Gr.2) and study of border phenomena such as stories on string.

Critical analysis of the ways in which cultural identity models and references spring from tradition texts and its specific forms of production; relation between popular and political manifestations (i.e. literary graffiti under the “Estado Novo”); imaginary crossways between different objects where tradition elements are predominant (i.e. bringing together automobile, heart and body).

Promoting reading of tradition texts and critical reading in context of literary studies; developing studies drawing critical tools upon other scientific areas such as history, biology, environment studies and mathematics planned to expand to other areas (philosophy, music studies, anthropology, Gr.3)

Future Research

Objectives

Examine problems of the traditional text in its main lines by separating and relating what is specific and what is general; understand insistent uses of repetition, both formal and thematic; analyse intratextual phenomena such as stories within stories, migrating characters, themes and images and the mixture of genres;

Editing the corpus of the tradition in collections, anthologies, partial editions, etc.; critical questioning of main aspects: survival of certain textual configurations (medieval, renaissance, epic, etc) in order to isolate and get a full understanding of common features; examine the uses of history materials; understand phenomena of continuity and discontinuity and the contribution of tradition texts towards constitution of literary canon;

Study the genres of traditional literature in various genre systems as well as different forms and aspects of genre variety and variation; examine characteristics and evolution of genre systems in pedagogical, exemplary and refreshment contexts;

Analyze the question of fiction in the specific context of traditional literature by studying representation, deformation or multiplication of reality; develop analysis of narrative phenomena; question different functions of fiction within traditional texts: moving, educating, instructing, or refreshing, as well as fiction's importance in poetic creation; examine narrative processes of belief and disbelief and the crucial role lies and deceit play in building fiction.

Develop reading of traditional literature as well as critical reading by editing texts and promoting studies based on dislocated perspectives which draw upon other scientific areas such as philosophy, biology, sociology, anthropology, environment studies, etc.; understand new interpretation phenomena related to recent developments in literary studies, as well as critical interrogations shared with other scientific areas in order to get a multidisciplinary perspective of traditional literature and a comprehension of the crucial role of these interrogations as regards understanding and relating to the world; study aspects of text reception and transmission.

Objectives and Achievements

General Objectives

To x-ray an epoch not only from the vanguard attitudes which characterize it but also from traditional values; observe the way tradition and modernity interact; evaluate the conservation action in process of creating new ("Each tradition link is made by a revolutionary. What they usually call tradition is 30 or 40 years of bad habits." Edgar Varése); provide elements to construct new map not only showing new acquisitions but also integrating traditional, popular, often orally transmitted roots; think out a text in relation to the texts preceding it, erased texts that form its base, texts it rewrites, parodies or cites - to cite: according to etymology, to testify, to witness, to legitimate; palimpsest (Genette); evaluate concepts like authorship, plagiarism and anonymous production (in what way does returning to tradition originate in necessity or the craving for memory? "Tradition is not an antique museum but the village well giving water to each generation" (João XXIII); understand surface, periphery, as unveiling of inner tensions, reflection of profundity; understand bark, relief, outline as illusion or concealment of other senses (François Dagognet); deconstruct the two ways of putting into perspective the world: a cultivating, constructive perspective, a metaphor for the soil (in which things that grow, fructify and nourish, take root) and a metaphor for bases, fundaments, foundations on which we walk, build, construct and elevate everything durable and firm - Hans Blumenberg: A root demands to pierce and penetrate the soil so that trees and plants can reach the light, that essential source of life; on the contrary, human buildings demand as a base (a foundation) a rock like density, undivided from its structure. Future Research

Objectives

- To identify the presence of themes, forms and poetic and narrative formulas of traditional genres in works produced by individuals, thus establishing the sources of the quotations and the allusions, albeit somewhat reworked, as well as the subject and the formal structures.
- This will enable us to look at these phenomena as not just being important for the understanding of an ancient tradition (an interest which concerned the first researchers, such as Teófilo Braga), but above all as a creative process with its own meaning and a defined aesthetic and ideological functionality. This critical viewpoint was started in the writings of Carolina Michaëlis de Vasconcelos and more fully developed in the writings of Eugenio Asensio and Giuseppe Di Stefano.
- To raise the issue of the literary artifice in the context of a tradition shared by the individual writer and his/her readership (16th – 18th Century), by studying the relations between traditional works and plays, poetry and historiography by renowned writers – as lyrical development and, above all, as parodying amplification. (as a subversion of the universe of the medieval knight).
- To reflect on the Enlightened concept of tradition, by providing a historical and cultural contextualisation of the forgetting of traditional texts on the part of the canonical writers and the resultant need for the memory and transmission of these to be located in less erudite forms of writing - a milieu which created the popular literatura de cordel which will be the subject of the first survey.
- To trace the signs of the major alteration of artistic parameters which occurred in nineteenth Century literary production, caused by the enthusiastic support for the essential spirit of modern nations which, in the words of Garrett, had been kept alive through the oral tradition.
- . – To critically analyse the interference between “voice” and “letter” in the modern oral tradition, giving particular attention to the study of the criteria for its encapsulation in the written form and to the phenomena of “re-traditionalisation”
– the product of a process of the re-introduction of the written into the continuous chain of fixing this both in memory and in the oral tradition.
- To critically consider the creative process (and of course its discursive insertions) in the context of individually produced contemporary literature, by discussing it through the poetics of different authors and the modern day cultural context in which it is used.
- To organise: a) a corpus of sources of traditional sayings used and reformulated by writers from the 16th Century until the present day (a collection which will take the work of C. Michaëlis de Vasconcelos, Romances Velhos em Portugal (Traditional Tales in Portugal) as its starting point for the reconsideration of these works and b) a descriptive typology of the forms of contagion between traditional compositions and individual creations, by considering the type of interaction and its aesthetic and ideological functionality.

Objectives and Achievements

General Objectives

This project invests in priority in environmental research: document the way nature has been envisioned and perceived by the population (the area conventionally called ethno ecology, with ethno botanical variants, for example). Lastly, the way popular as “ecocriticism” by Cheryll Burgess Glotfelty, fertility of university research and attempt to create knowledge in pairs or as a team (François Jacob). To achieve our purposes we have intensified the interdisciplinary comments by researchers and specialists of a wide range of areas beside the academic nucleus of literature: biology, environment, animal ethics, sociology, geography, anthropology, landscaping, bioclimatics, and other subjects.

It is precisely by its interdisciplinary character that ecology, a meeting point between natural sciences and humanities, joins this project. A challenge: seeing in the collections/recollections a conservative force which turns the natural reserve park where the texts are found (pages from a book) something false (not really fake, made in the fashion of?), because its original context was taken away from it; but also as something authentic, because the texts were preserved as natural forms of life, without as much as possible human intervention (no corrections or adaptations). Traditional literature sometimes so hard to understand and classify in its performing dimension, reappears in a collection protected from outside damage, surrounded by a generic name, preserved and immunized in the present so that future study can be carried out.

Traditional literature in volume and in analyzing process as a kind of ecomuseum, a research centre, an observatory and laboratory, a meeting point for researchers in different areas of knowledge.

Only by breaking the patterns can the so called “connective education” (David Orr) be attained, which is a state essential in dealing with complex environmental themes that can not be understood by a single subject or department. In fact, if, on one hand, ecology is built on the interrelation of knowledge, on the other hand ecological literacy is attained through teaching the ability to mix “landscape” and “mindscape”, thinking openly, recognizing connections instead of unmaking and tearing apart.

2006 (18 - 20 September), Évora, Claustro da Cisterna and Colégio do Espírito Santo belonging to Universidade de Évora: Encontros IELT: Representações.

The meeting Representações invites a wide range of searchers, academics and artists to reflect and debate areas of knowledge such as literature and arts about the ways of representing the concepts of eating, smelling and agriculture, the three major subjects of the Festival Escrita na Paisagem.

With the support/aim of the academic and artistic contributions thro books, debates, round tables, workshops, animation, a wine proof, an exhibition, film projections, and several music and performance shows, the meeting Representações explores different and multidisciplinary research areas such as food security, the role of food stuffs in the Cancioneiros, or eat and being eaten in the traditional tales. The meeting Representações acts as a platform for interdisciplinary reflection able of revealing the projection of this domain of study and discovery, privileges the scientific accuracy without excluding the promotion of different and plural approaches.

Among the participants and animators there were several members from IELT, such as Pedro Prista, Ignacio Vilariño, Ana Paula Guimarães, Ana Morais, Carlos Augusto Ribeiro, and the anthropologists Mouette Barboff and Pedro Prista who made comments on four recent ethnographic films that portrait the Portuguese reality on agriculture.

Future Research

Objectives

The «Falas da Terra» area of studies continues to develop his work around two major objectives: encouraging the production of knowledge concerning the representation of nature and environment in literature and, in consequence, the diffusion of all the production.

In this framing has been supported the research about food stuffs, tradition and environment, an area of study that, in Portugal, needed to be developed. In our day, especially since 2002, food and cuisine has obtained the recognition of her role as immaterial patrimony (UNESCO) in the major field of Human Sciences.

We intend to continue accomplishing our objectives with meetings, conferences, multimedia editions and, obviously, publishing, as demonstrates the collections “a Ieltzar se vai ao longe” and “B.I.”, and also the subventions to other editions in partnership.

This project aims to create working tools for teaching, serving the community not only through information about the representation of environment in Portuguese Imaginary, but also in the practical use of certain results.

The project created from the film «Les Glâneurs et la Glaneuse» by Agnès Varda (2000) opens paths of reflection about memory, museum, (re) collection and (re) creation. Following this theoretical perspective, a study is being made of REMAINS, leftovers, excrements, ruins, ashes, memories: less is more (François Dagognet), details and diversity, challenges to the canon (História da Carochinha, A Formiga e a Neve, O Pito-Suro, O Macaco e a Romãzeira). Items to be developed:

- The discourse of the establishment and the power of the small, questions of language in the texts where the living beings communicate.
- To make known contemporary artistic manifestation with an underlying idea of recycling, transmutation, “transfiguration of the trivial” (Arthur Danto) and encouraging a cultured practice that acts upon materials usually considered inferior – making evident the popular survival in urban culture specially in situations of emigration and migration. A different way of looking at what lies near is born far away (organization and production levels depend on financing)
- Free course planned for the community (specially teachers of visual and technological education) about the ART OF REMAINS AND THE REMAINS OF ART (under the direction of Carlos Augusto Ribeiro) with workshops of reflection and practice about left-over materials which reflect Portuguese cultural identity. For example: cork, Portuguese sidewalks, tiles, embroideries, linen, wool, salt, soap, glass, cakes and sweets (with the collaboration of artists). Material documents about the question of scale and established values (if there are audiovisual means): Carlos Barroco, Com Quase Nada (2000) about toys from Cape Verde, a people “inventing their own playthings”; Claude Nuridsany and Marie Pérennou, Microcosmos – o povo da erva, won a prize in Cannes 1996; Potências de Dez – O mundo às várias escalas, an exhibition organized by Serviço de Ciência of Fundação Calouste Gulbenkian in 2002; and the already mentioned central film of this project: «Les Glâneurs et la Glaneuse» by Agnès Varda (2000)

Less is more (François Dagognet) is also connected with the project presented by Teresa Almeida (Faces of Eve) - Portuguese Women Writers (16th-18th Century) - Rate: Very Good - funded by FCT (1-10-2007-30-9-2009)
